FORWARD

The author started out to prove his descendancy from the great American Statesman, Patrick Henry, as was alleged by some members of the Henry family. After two years of research, the connection was broken when Richard Henry, grandson of Patrick, did not turn out to be the Richard Henry that was my great grandfather.

But so much had been gathered in the quest for information that I was not able to completely discard it. I therefore decided to attempt to preserve what research I had done and thus this publication.

I hope that it will aid in your research. When one alleges he or she is a descendent of Patrick Henry, there is a good chance of that being true: with his seventeen children spanning some forty-four years of married life, "the cradle never stopped rocking" in his home during his life.

As a member of the Genealogy Club of Albuquerque, I am donating this book to their collection of works and permitting them to distribute it as they see fit.

LAMBERT OF LENS, CHAPTER 1

Our story commences with the earliest clansman the researcher found, leading to the birth of Patrick Henry, the great Virginian, governor, orator, and author of "give me liberty or give me death". This researcher had heard many years that we were a part of the Henry clan, and thus this study. But eventually the connection disappeared and the chain broken, leaving the researcher with a lot of information about an alien family. Thus this work for the preservation of the research that had been done and the stories that had been ferreted out of many books. This researcher hopes this information may be of some aid and value to others searching this line.

Lambert of LENS, Count of Louvaine,
m. Adelaide de GAND, Countess of Albemarle and half-sister of William the Conqueror^{17, p.97}

Issue:

1. Judith LAMBERT
m. Earl WALDEOFUS, the Earl of Northumberland

Issue of Judith and Earl WALDEOFUS:

1. Maud WALDEOFUS
m. King DAVID I, d. May 23, 1153. King David I reigned from 1124 to 1153. A wise and just prince, he had only the one son. Through his wife, Maud, he acquired Northumberland and Huntingdon to the Crown of Scotland. He succeeded his brother, Alexander, to the throne in 1124 and erected the Bishoprics of Ross, Dunblane, Dunkell, and Brechin. He was buried in Dunfermling, which was built by his brother, Alexander.^{17, p.97}

Issue of King DAVID and Maud:

1. Prince HENRY, Prince of Scotland, Earl of Huntingdon, he was one of the most accomplished Princes of his time, but died in 1152 before his father's death.^{17, p.97} He married Ada WARREN, the daughter of William de WARREN.

Issue of Prince HENRY and Ada WARREN:

1. Earl DAVID, Earl of Huntingdon, a great commander under King RICHARD I, the Lion-hearted, at the siege of Acre in Palestine. He died in 1219 at Yondly Castle, Northamptonshire, and is buried at Santrey Abbey near Commington Castle in Huntingdon. He married Maud KYVILIOCK and they had sons that all died without issue, and three daughters who became claimants of the Crown of Scotland.^{22, p.97}

Issue of Earl DAVID and Maud KYVILIOCK:

1. Margaret DAVID, and she, upon the death of her brothers, without issue, became one of the claimants of the Crown of Scotland. Her grandson, John BALLIOL, was designated for the honor by King Edward I of England, acting as umpire. But, eventually, circumstances changed and Robert BRUCE, great grandson of her sister Isabel ascended to the Crown. The names of her children are not reported here.

2. Isabel DAVID. She married Robert de BRUCE, the Earl of Annandale. She and two sisters claimed the Crown at the death of the father. Sister Margaret's grandson was named, as above stated, but things changed and her great grandson, Robert BRUCE, (1274-1329) was crowned King of Scotland and took the name of Robert I.

3. Ada DAVID

Issue of Isabel DAVID and Robert de BRUCE:

1. Robert BRUCE, b. 1210, d. 1295. He was the fifth Earl of Annandale, a crusader and claimant of the Crown of Scotland. He married Isabel GILBERT, the daughter of 7th Earl GILBERT, the Earl of Hertford and Gloucester, and his wife, ISABEL, daughter of WILLIAM, who was born about 1215.

PARENTS OF ISABEL GILBERT

The Sixth Earl RICHARD, the 6th Earl of Clare and a Magna Charta surety. He married Amicia, daughter of WILLIAM, who was the 2nd Earl of Gloucester and his wife, who was a daughter of Robert de BELLOMONT, the 2nd Earl of Gloucester. He was the son of Robert, who created the Earl of Leicester, and his wife, Isabel de VERMANDOIS. They had issue -

The Seventh Earl GILBERT, Earl of Hertford and Gloucester, and also a Magna Carta surety. He married Isabel, daughter of 2nd Earl WILLIAM le Marechal, 3rd Earl of Pembroke, (Protector of England during the minority of Henry III) and his wife, Isabel, who was the daughter of Richard de CLARE, also called "Strongbow", the 2nd Earl of Pembroke and Princess Eva, the daughter of Dermot MacMURROUGH, the last King of Lienster. Richard de CLARE was the son of Gilbert de CLARE and Elizabeth, daughter of Robert de BELLOMONT, Earl of Leicester, and his wife, Isabel de VERMANDOIS. The 7th Earl GILBERT and Isabel, as first set forth in this paragraph, had issue, Isabel, who married Robert

Issue of Robert BRUCE and Isabel GILBERT:

1. Robert BRUCE, b. 1245, d. 1304, who, upon his marriage to Martha of CARRICK, who was born about 1246, became the Earl of Carrick.

Issue of Robert BRUCE and Martha of CARRICK:

1. King Robert BRUCE, b. 1274, d. 1329, took the name of King ROBERT I, upon ascension to the Crown. He married Isabel DONALD, EARL, she having been born about 1275.

Issue of King ROBERT I (Robert BRUCE) and Isabel DONALD:

1. Marjorie BRUCE, born about 1294, and she married then the 6th Steward of Scots WALTER, who died in 1326. (See Chapter 2, First of the Stewarts, for their lineage).

Issue of 6th Steward of Scots WALTER and Marjorie BRUCE:

1. King of Scots ROBERT II, b. 1337, d. Apr 29, 1390, at Dundonald, Ayrshire, Scotland, and buried at Scone. He was married in 1348 to Elizabeth MURE, who was born about 1320.

Robert II ruled Scotland from 1371 to 1390. He was the first king of the Stewart dynasty. He may have commanded a division at the battle of Halidon Hill, fought against the English in July, 1333, and was certainly a leader in the resistance the next year, becoming joint regent with John Randolph, Earl of Moray, for the exiled David II, and, because of his irresponsible conduct, was soon deposed, but was sole regent from 1338 until the king's return from France in 1341. Escaping from the defeat at Neville's Cross in 1346, he was again regent during David's captivity from 1346 to 1357.

Although created earl of Strathearn in November of 1357, he constantly opposed the king, raising unsuccessful rebellion in 1362 and 1363 with the earls of Douglas and March, after which he was made to renew his oath of allegiance in May, 1363.

He opposed David's abortive scheme for cancellation of the royal ransom in return for making a son of Edward III heir to the Scottish throne, which would have nullified his own right of succession.

He was imprisoned in 1368 and 1369 in Lochleven Castle. On David's death on February 22, 1371, he succeeded to the throne by hereditary right. Throughout his reign he made little mark on affairs.

In 1384 he gave over domestic administration to his eldest son, John (Robert III), earl of Carrick, and in 1388, owing to Carrick's ill health, to his next surviving son, Robert, earl of Fife.

His first marriage in about 1348 was to Elizabeth MURE, born about 1320, and was solemnized after the birth of their four sons and five daughters, which gave doubtful validity for succession to the throne.

His second marriage was about 1355 to Euphemia ROSS. Issue of that marriage, if any, are not known here.

Issue of KING ROBERT II and Elizabeth MURE:

1. King of Scots, ROBERT III, b. 1337, d. Apr 4, 1406, at Rothesay in Bute and buried at Paisley Abbey. See continuation of his line in next section below, page nine.

2. Robert STEWART, the third of four sons, only three of whom are known here, was the Duke of Albany, Earl of Fife, and Earl of Menteith. He also inherited earldom of Buchan from his brother, Sir Alexander Stewart (who was the fourth son). These earldoms were forfeited upon the execution of his son, Murdoch, in 1425. The earldom of Buchan returned the Stewart house to James, second son of Sir James Stewart, the Black Knight of Lorn.^{22, v.21, p.405} The reader will find his progeny on page nine when Lady Margaret Crichton, the second great granddaughter of King JAMES II, unites in marriage with John ROBERTSON, the third great grandson of this Robert.

3. Sir Alexander STEWART, actually the fourth son. He was made earl of Buchan, but he earned, by his ferocity, the title of "wolf of Badenoch". He inherited the earldom of Ross by his wife, but died without legitimate issue, but illegitimate offspring descended to the Stewarts of Belladrum, Athole, Garth, Urrard, and St. Fort. At his death the earldom of Buchan passed to his brother, Robert, duke of Albany (paragraph above).^{22, v.21, p.405}

KING OF SCOTS, ROBERT III.

He married Annabella DRUMMOND, daughter of Sir John DRUMMOND, and she died in 1401.

He was King of Scots from 1390 to 1406, at the time of his death. They had three sons and four daughters, of which we have only one son and one daughter set out here.

Robert III was the eldest son of Robert II and Elizabeth MUIR, and was legitimated through their marriage after his birth. He was first named John, and in 1362-63 he joined his father in the rebellion against David II, and in 1368 was created earl of Carrick, and imprisoned with his father and two brothers. They were released in 1369.

His father became King of Scotland in 1371, but in 1384, owing to old age, gave over the government to Carrick. Carrick was lamed by a horse and was supplanted by his brother, Robert, earl of Fife, in 1388.

Upon his accession to the throne in 1390, he changed his name to Robert III. His brother, Robert, created duke of Albany in 1398, continued to govern this reign except during the years 1399-1402 when the king's dissolute heir, David, duke of Rothesay, took his place until he met an early death in Albany's castle of Falkland.

Robert III's remaining son, James I, was sent to France for safety, but captured by the English and that proved fatal to the aging king, who died at Rothesay in Bute and buried in Paisley Abbey.^{22, v.19, p.383}

Issue of ROBERT III and Annabella DRUMMOND:

1. King of Scots JAMES I, b. 1394, at Dunfermline, Scotland, d. Feb 20, 1437 at Perth, Scotland. He married Joan BEAUFORT.

2. Elizabeth STUART, Princess, who married Sir James DOUGLAS, Lord of Dalkeith and Morton and forefather of President James MONROE^{22, v.22, p.139} and President Theodore ROOSEVELT.^{22, v.22, p.142}

KING OF SCOTS, JAMES I:

Born Jul, 1384, at Dunfermline, Scotland, and died Feb 20, 1437, at Perth, Scotland.

He married, in 1424, Joan BEAUFORT, born about 1408 and died 1445.

Joan BEAUFORT Ancestors:

King Edward III, b. Nov 13, 1312, at Windsor, England, d. Jun 21, 1377, Sheen, (now Richmond), England. He was king of England from 1327 to 1377 at his death. He had seven sons and five daughters, of which only one son is enumerated here:

John of GAUNT, b. 1340, d. 1399, the duke of Lancaster, married in Sep, 1396, by the Pope and then in Feb, 1397, was married by Richard II Catherine SWYNFORD, the widow of Sir Hugh SWYNFORD, maiden name unknown. They had four

Issue:

1. John BEAUFORT, b. 1371, d. May 16, 1410, earl of Somerset, father of Joan BEAUFORT (above), and of Beaufort Castle in Anjou, France. He married Margaret HOLLAND, and they had five children:

- i. Henry BEAUFORT, Earl of Somerset, born about 1401, died 1418.
- ii. John BEAUFORT, b. about 1404, d. May 27, 1444, the duke of Somerset. He married Margaret BEAUCHAMP and they had an illegitimate daughter and illegitimate son. He was captured and held in France from 1421 to 1438 and made Knight of the Garter in 1440. He had an ill-fated expedition to France and died of mysterious circumstances.

iii. Edmund BEAUFORT, b. about 1406, d. May 22, 1455, the duke of Somerset. He married Elizabeth BEAUCHAMP and had three sons and five daughters. He was a Knight of the Garter before 1436, and died in the War of Roses, the first battle of St. Albans.

iv. Joan BEAUFORT, born about 1408, died 1445, the wife of King of Scots JAMES I, having married in 1424.

v. Margaret BEAUFORT, married Thomas Courtney, earl of Devon.

2. Henry BEAUFORT, b. 1374, d. Apr 11, 1447, the cardinal Bishop of Winchester.

3. Thomas BEAUFORT, d. 1426, the duke of Exeter, and a fleet commander, chancellor, and member of the council under Gloucester's protectorate. He died without issue.

4. Joan BEAUFORT, d. 1440, who married twice, the second being Sir Ralph Neville, earl of Westmorland.

Issue of King JAMES I and Joan BEAUFORT (eight children):

a. Margaret, b. about 1436 who married LOUIS, French Dauphin.

b. Alexander, born Oct 16, 1430, a twin of James II; he died in 1430 in infancy.

c. James II, born Oct 16, 1430, a twin of Alexander, d. 1460. See the next page for his marriage and background and continuation of the line.

d. Isabella, married Duke FRANCIS I of Brittany.

e. Joan, married James EARL of Morton.

f. Eleanor, married Archduke SIGISMUND of Austria.

g. Mary, married Count WOLFERT of Grandpre.

h. Annabella, married GEORGE, Earl of Huntly.

King JAMES I reigned from 1406 to 1437. After the death of his mother, Joan, in 1401 and his brother, David, of suspicious circumstances the following Easter, he was sent for safety to France. But he was captured off Flamborough head in March, 1406, and kept prisoner of successive English kings for 18 years. His father, ROBERT III, died upon hearing of the capture and he was made king, but the regent, Albany, showed no desire for his nephew's release. Therefore, growing to manhood in England, he received an excellent education by HENRY IV. HENRY V summoned him to confront the Scots serving with the French armies and he participated in the sieges of Melun, Dreux, and Meaux. He was knighted at Windsor in 1421 by Henry V, and was the chief mourner at Henry's funeral the next year.

The minority of HENRY VI and the death of Albany provided the opportunity for release in 1424 via marriage with Joan BEAUFORT. A ransom of 40 thousand pounds, less ten thousand marks as Joan's dowry, was to be paid within six years and a truce for seven.

Returning to a kingdom which had no strong leader for 100 years, James resolved to "make the key keep the castle and the braken bush the cow." His first parliament enacted that "ferme and sikker pece be kepit throu all the realme." To curb the nobles, he had Duke Murdoch and his two sons and the earl of Lennox executed. He executed lesser nobles and imprisoned some. He instituted a court of justice and introduced the tradition of counsel for the poor.

Little of the ransom was paid, but he renewed the treaty with England for five more years. However, in 1436 he sent his daughter, Margaret, to marriage with Louis, the French dauphin, and besieged Roxburgh castle with ignominious failure. His son would later raze the castle.

Much of his legislation bore on economic and social life. The yield of the crown lands was trebled and that of the customs doubled. Thirteen years of vigorous government antagonized the nobles and Walter, earl of Atholl, incited Sir Robert Stewart and Sir Robert Graham to murder James at Perth on the night of February 20, 1437. James was buried in the charterhouse he had founded, as was Queen Joan, who, after marrying Sir James Stewart of Lorne, died in 1445.

Though thickset and fat, James was strong and vigorous. He had athletic prowess, musical skill, artistic talent, and interest in "moral sciences and mechanical arts."^{22, v.12, p.858}

KING OF SCOTS, JAMES II:

James was born Oct 16, 1430, at Holyrood, Scotland, and died 1460 at Roxburgh Castle, Scotland. He married Lady Mary ARNOLD on Jul 3, 1449, the daughter of ARNOLD, duke of Gelders.^{17, p.99} They had two children; one was Princess Margaret STUART, who married the Third Lord WILLIAM.²⁷ the second James III.

His succeeded to the throne on Feb 21, 1437. During his minority, schism in the church intensified the strife between the Douglas-Livingstone (antipapal) party and that of the Chichtons, who were supported by the papalist bishop of St. Andrews, James Kennedy. The situation changed, however, with the healing of the schism and the king's coming of age; and from the date of his marriage to Lady Mary of Guelders (Netherlands), daughter of Arnold, duke of Guelders, and niece of Philip of Burgundy. James was his own master at 19.

He continued his father's policy of strengthening the crown against the barons and of securing control over the national church; and he also sought to profit from the international situation to pursue an imperialistic policy against England. The first of these aims involved a struggle with the overgrown house of Douglas, which maintained a treasonable intercourse with the Yorkists in England and with the disaffected Crawford and lord of the Isles at home. The final contest was precipitated by the king's rash act in murdering William, 8th earl of Douglas, while his quest under safe-conduct at Stirling castle on February 22, 1452. The new earl procrastinated, and James, on advice of Kennedy, won over some of his supporters. The Black Douglases were over-thrown in 1455 and their estates annexed to the crown. Thereafter, James sought to aggrandize the royal house by forming a semiroyal peerage and a nobility of service and by securing the earldom of Mar and Moray and the lordship of Man for his sons.

James maintained the French alliance and sought French support for an attack on England. He plotted with both Lancaster and York, although ostensibly his quarrel was with the Yorkists, who harbored the renegade Douglas and revived claims to the overlordship of Scotland. He raided Northumberland in 1456 and laid siege to Roxburgh castle, where he was killed by the bursting of a cannon.

A soldier's king, James was impulsive and masterful, with the charm and versatility of the Stewarts.

Roxburgh consisted of a formidable castle and flourishing town from which the shire took its name. No trace exists of the town today, and all that is left of the castle are a few ruins shaded by ancient ash trees. But it was founded in 1128 as a religious center and claimed precedence over many monasteries and disputing the supremacy of St. Andrew's church. The castle was abandoned in favor of the rising burgh of Kelso.^{22, v.13, p.274}

Issue of King JAMES II and Lady Mary ARNOLD:

1. Princess Margaret STUART who married the Third Lord WILLIAM. (See in the next section immediately below).
2. JAMES III, born May, 1452, St. Andrews, Scotland, and died Jun 11, 1488, Bannockburn, Scotland. (Next below).

KING OF SCOTS, JAMES III:

Born May, 1452, at St. Andrews, Scotland, and married in 1469 to Margaret ARNOLD, who was born about 1454. She was the daughter of Christian I, King of Denmark and King of Norway.^{17, p.99} This marriage brought Orkney and Shetland to the Scottish crown.

Immediately after the marriage he broke the power that the Boyd family had acquired during his minority. In 1482 the Scottish nobles, seeking a leader of spirit, found it in the earl of Angus (from Douglas) and the King's favorites were captured at Lander and hanged. James recovered power, but after a defeat by a confederacy of nobles at Sauchieburn, he "happinst to be slane" on Jun 11, 1488.

This ends this line of research in James' family.

PRINCESS MARGARET STUART:

Princess Margaret STUART married Third Lord WILLIAM, who was the Third Lord Crichton and forfeited Crichton in 1483-1484.

Their issue:

1. Sir James CRICHTON. His spouse is unknown, but he was the father of Lady Margaret CRICHTON, who weds John ROBERTSON. This is a union of two branches of the same family, John Robertson being a third great grandson of Robert STEWART, brother of King ROBERT III.

KING OF SCOTS, ROBERT II and ELIZABETH MURE

As seen on page three, Robert II and Elizabeth MURE had three issue: King of Scots, ROBERT III, Robert STEWART, and Sir Alexander STEWART. This section is a continuation of the family of ROBERT STEWART.

Robert STEWART had son, Sir John STUART, who married Isabel D'ERGADIA. Their son was:

Sir James STUART, the father of:

Sir John STUART, who married Lady Eleanor SINCLAIR, the daughter of WILLIAM, Earl of Orkney, a descendent of James I, King of Scotland. Sir John STUART was a descendent of Edward I, King of England. They had issue:

Lady ISABEL STEWART, who married John STUART, who was the earl of Lennox and a Regent.^{17, p.153} They had a son, Matthew STUART, the earl of Lennox. She then married Alexander ROBERTSON and they had issue:

John ROBERTSON, who married Lady Margaret CRICHTON (Just above). He was the first Laird of Muirton, Elgin. He and Lady Margaret were 5th cousins, and is the connection for Patrick Henry's family laying claim to the royal lineage: through John ROBERTSON to King Robert II, and through Lady Crichton to King James II, King James II, James' wife, Joan BEAUFORT to King Edward III, and then James' line on through King Robert III, and his father, King Robert II's mother, Marjorie BRUCE, who descended from King David I.

This then brought the two houses back together as one.

JOHN ROBERTSON and LADY MARGARET CRICHTON had issue:

1. Gilbert ROBERTSON of Muirton, who had issue:

1) David ROBERTSON of Muirton, who had issue:

i) William ROBERTSON of Muirton, who had issue:

(1) William ROBERTSON of Gladney, who had issue:

(i) Rev. William ROBERTSON of Gladness, Scotland

who had issue as follows:

ISSUE OF REV. WILLIAM ROBERTSON:

1. William ROBERTSON, who was the Royal Historiographer in Edinburgh.
2. Jean ROBERTSON, who married Alexander HENRY, the first of the Henry ancestors by that name found so far. See Chapter 3, Alexander HENRY.
3. Donald ROBERTSON, who married Rachel ROGERS on Sep 21, 1744, the daughter of John ROGERS.

FIRST OF THE STUARTS, CHAPTER 2

The name of the First of the STEWART clan is not known to this researcher, but is used to start the family that is found. The spellings through history vary widely and often between Stewart, Steward, Stuart. The terms seems to come from the appointment after the freedom from of the Bretons, that Alan was appointed the Steward of the lands of Scotland.

He was the father of:

1. Flaald STEWART, who had issue as below:
2. Alan Steward of DOL STEWART. His name occurs in Breton documents before 1080 and he went on the crusade in 1097. He was succeeded as Steward of Dol by his brother, Flaald.

ISSUE OF FLAALD STEWART:

1. Alan STEWART, whose uncle, Alan Steward of Dol in Brittany, had gone to the crusades in 1097 and this Alan had gained the favor of Henry I, who bestowed on him Mileham and its barony in Norfolk, where he founded Sporle priory. He was apparently a Breton immigrant and founder of the name Stewart (Stuart, Steuart). ^{18, v. 21, p.405}

He married the Daughter of Ernulf DE HESDIN (in Picardy, a Domesday baron). They had the following issue:

- 1) Jordan STEWART, who succeeded to the family office of steward of Dol.
- 2) William STEWART, who inherited Mileham and other estates in England and who founded the great baronial house of Fitz Alan.
- 3) Walter Steward of Scots STEWART, born 1100, who was made steward (dapifer) of Scotland by King David I. The Scottish king conferred on Walter various lands in Renfrewshire, including Paisley, where Walter founded the abbey in 1163.

ISSUE OF WALTER STEWARD OF SCOTS STEWART:

1. Walter 2nd Steward STEWART. This compiler could not find the name of the true issue of Walter, except that he passed the stewardship to his grandson, the 3rd steward of Scots. So compiler is using this same name for lineage, and not the truth of the matter. His issue:

1) Walter, 3rd Steward STEWART, who died in 1246. He was the 3rd Steward of Scotland and appointed by Alexander II justiciary of Scotland. He left four sons and three daughters, one son being:

i. Alexander STEWART, who, by marrying Jean, granddaughter of SOMERLED, inherited the isles of Bute and Arran. On Oct 2, 1263, Alexander led the Scots against King Haakon IV of Norway at Largs. He had two issue:

(i) James STEWART, who died in 1309. He succeeded his father in 1283 after distinguishing himself in the wars of Wallace and of Bruce in Ireland. See his issue, page 12.

(ii) John STEWART. The name of his spouse is not known, but he left seven sons:

(1) Sir Alexander STEWART. His grandson, George, became Earl of Angus in 1389 and the title afterwards passing in the female line to the Douglasses and in 1761 to the duke of Hamilton.

(2) Sir Alan of Dreghorn STEWART. The ancestor of the earls and dukes of Lennox, from whom Lord Barnley, husband of Queen Mary, and also Lady Arabella Stuart, were descended.

(3) Sir Walter STEWART. Obtained the barony of Garlies, Wigtownshire, from his uncle, John RANDOLPH, earl of Moray, and was the ancestor of the earls of Galloway, younger branches of the family being the Stewarts of Tonderghie, Wigtownshire, and also those of Physgill and Glenturk in the same county.

(4) Sir James STEWART. Killed at Dupplin, Scotland, Aug 17, 1332. Ancestor of the lords of Lorn, on whose descendants were conferred, at different periods. the earldoms of Athole, Ruchan, and Traquair, and who were also the progenitors of the Stewarts of Appin, Argyllshire, and of Grandtull, Perthshire.

The Battle of Dupplin was fought August 12, 1332, and marked renewal of Scottish War of Independence, which apparently had been ended by the peace of Northampton in 1328. Under Henry de Beaumont and secret connivance of English king Edward III, those who had been disinherited by Robert I for their adherence to the English, planned to recover their Scottish lands by force. Edward Balliol came from France to head their expedition and embarked at Ravenspur with about 1500 men, the "disinherited".

They landed at Kinghorn in Fife and routed local levies who opposed them. By way of Dunfermline, the invaders reached the Earn river on the opposite bank of which lay a Scottish force under Donald, earl of Mar, regent for the young David II. Forging the river on the night of August 11-12, the "disinherited" overwhelmed a Scottish encampment. Despite this initial success, dawn revealed the main Scottish force arrayed in two divisions and ready to attack. Greatly outnumbered, Balliol's men adopted tactics, later copied by Edward III at the battles of Halidon Hill and Crecy; save for about 40 German mercenaries kept in reserve, all the men-at-arms dismounted, while archers were posted on either flank. When an impetuous charge by the first Scottish division failed to make headway, its flanks were riddled by flights of English arrows and converged in disorder upon the center. At this point the second division (under Mar) charged, collided with the rear-most ranks of the first division, but failed to build the momentum to those in front. Losing their footing, the Scottish men-at-arms and spearmen trod one another underfoot in pandemonium and many more died from suffocation than by the sword.

Pursuing the fugitives, Balliol's men entered Perth and crowned their leader at Scone on Sep 24, 1332.^{22, v.7, p.770}

(5) Sir John STEWART. Died Jul 19, 1333, at the battle of Halidon Hill, Scotland, fought that day. The English king Edward III began his triumphant military career in Scotland and France. When Edward besieged Berwick on behalf of his vassal, Edward BALLIOL, the defenders agreed to capitulate unless relieved by July 20, 1333. Thus being forced to fight a pitched battle to relieve the town, Sir Archibald Douglas, regent for the young David II, found its approaches blocked by the English on Halidon Hill. Elaborating on the tactics used at the battle of Dupplin, Edward had the wings of each to harass the attackers by enfilade fire. Having also dismounted, the three divisions of the Scottish host were riddled with arrows as they advanced across swampy ground and then struggled uphill. Those who reached the English lines were soon overcome. Mounting their horses, the English hunted the fugitives till dusk. The next day Berwick surrendered. But although Balliol was reinstated, Scottish resistance continued and ultimately prevailed.^{22, v. 11, p.2}

Col. John was first of Henry in America, emigrating to Virginia sometime early 1723. He was a colonel in the militia in Scotland. He was extremely well educated. He came to Hanover County, Virginia, to a farm called Rocky Hills in 1730. The Henry Family Records by Seaver, 1929,²⁷ states he was "seated at Studley" and "The Retreat".

Brother Rev. Patrick Henry came also from Aberdeen, Scotland. Patrick Henry, Col. John's second son, was named after him. Cousin David Henry was editor of the Gentlemen's Magazine in Scotland, and cousin William Robertson was principal of the University of Edinburgh.

Col. John Henry was a land surveyor and laid out Hanover and Louisa Counties. He owned several plantations, one being Mount Pleasant of 348 acres, which he sold in 1739 and moved to Retreat, Virginia. He was sworn as a vestryman of St. Paul Parish on April 11, 1738.

One reference, "Some Prominent Virginia Families"²⁸ indicates that Judge James Henry was a grandson of Alexander Henry and Jean Robertson, Col. John's parents, so he must have been a cousin of this subject.

WILLIAM WINSTON, CHAPTER 4

William WINSTON, d. 1702, of St. Peter's Parish, New Kent County, VA, is recorded as living there as early as 1687. His name appears in York County records in 1666 and 1667. He had patented land in 1687, '90, '91, '96, and 1701. He died in Kent County before Feb, 1702,²⁶ leaving at least one son, Anthony, of New Kent County. He supposedly had two brothers, Isaac and James (or John), and came from Yorkshire, England, to Virginia about 1700.^{29, p.2367}

Isaac WINSTON, b. c. 1676, d. Feb 1760 at Hanover, VA, was an emigrant about 1704, the son of Anthony WINSTON (d. Dec 4, 1725). m. Mary DABNEY.

Isaac came from Wales, via Yorkshire, in 1704.^{15, v. 2, p.291} Hanover County was formed from New Kent County and St. Paul's Parish. Isaac was long a prominent resident of the section. His name appears as owning land as early as January, 1708. His name appears with the land processionings and road clearings in that parish in 1712, and in 1711 he was himself named as a processioner of lands. In 1720 the county of Hanover erected from the upper part of New Kent and the territory comprised within the boundaries of St. Paul's Parish fell within the new county. From its formation in 1720 until his death in 1760, he was a justice of the peace in Hanover, and from October, 1731, to as late as the year 1744, he is referred to in the records as Captain Isaac Winston. He engaged in merchandizing.^{26, p.2371}

A copy of his will is found in that same reference. Some record reviewed, but not now found, indicated that his father lived in Wales and his great grandfather was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1620.

William was called "Langloo" and was a great orator. He was a lieutenant of a company of fighters, the last of the French and Indian wars. "When he addressed the indifferently clothed, without tents, exposed to inclemency of weather and great aversion to the service, clamorous to return to families, his oratory was so eloquent on liberty and patriotism, they cried 'Let us march on! Lead us against the enemy.'" ²⁵

He must have been born around 1712, as brother, Isaac, second child, was born about 1715-1720; brother, Anthony, born about 1723. ²⁶

He "...displayed an untoward wild streak, running off to the west to hunt and trap among the Indians half of the year...in remote mountain cabins, hunting wild deer and trading with the distant Indians. Langloo preferred buckskin to broadcloth, was whispered to have Indian wives, and kept his distance from the polite society of Tidewater."²³

PATRICK HENRY, CHAPTER 6

Patrick HENRY, b. May 29, 1736, Royal Plains, VA, d. Jun 6, 1799, Red Hill, VA.

m. 1st: Oct, 1754, at Royal Plains, VA, Sarah SHELTON, b. 1738, d. Feb 1775, daughter of John SHELTON (son of John SHELTON and Lettice BALL) and Eleanor PARKS, daughter of William Parks and Eleanor). She received six negroes and 300 acres of land in Pine Slash and was burned out in 1757. They sold the slaves and opened a store for three years, but it failed. She was called "Sallie" and married Patrick at age of 16.

Patrick was married at age 18. He learned Latin well and read with ease the Roman classics. His early years gave no promise of the distinction which he acquired in subsequent life. The system of education in Virginia at that time consisted of almost an entire lack of public schools. His father, John, and his uncle, Rev. Patrick Henry, Rector of St. Paul's Parish in Virginia, soon took over the task of education. Rev. Henry was a good Scotch classicist and there he learned Latin and Greek, but was considered a limited education. Young Patrick had a good knowledge of mathematics, for which he manifested some degree of fondness.

During the first 10 years of his life, he seems to have made some small and reluctant progress, but he showed little likeness for "book learning". His father was a well-educated Scotsman who served Virginia as a surveyor, colonel, and justice of the Hanover county court. His mother was a sturdy and devout woman of the Winston family and from the English West County. The first Winston may have come from Bristol as an indentured servant. From the Winston family, Patrick derived some of his oratorical talent, and found further inspiration in two eloquent preachers who came to Hanover County, Samuel Davies and George Whitefield.

He lived on the York River, 40 miles from the bay. Winstons lived 30 miles on upstream. The second generation of Winstons -- William, Anthony, and Edmund -- patented 5000 acres in New Kent County, which later became Hanover county.

In 1759, Thomas Jefferson, then a lad of 16 and on his way to William and Mary College, happened to spend the Christmas holidays at the home of Col. Nathaniel Dandridge in Hanover, and there met Patrick. Long afterwards, in recalling these days, Jefferson furnished this picture of Henry: "Mr. Henry had, a little before, broken up his store or rather it had broken him up, but his misfortunes were not to be traced either in his countenance or in his conduct. During the festivities of the season, I met him every day and we became well acquainted although I was much his junior. His manner had something of coarseness in it. His passion was music, dancing, and pleasantry. He excelled in the last and it attracted every one to him."

Another author comments that Henry married at 18 and engaged successively, but most unsuccessfully, in the mercantile, agricultural, and again in the mercantile business. He had failed twice in seven years at these occupations and when his family had been reduced in circumstances, as to be in want of even the necessities of life, he turned his attention to the law and after six weeks' study, obtained license to practice in 1760. He was especially successful in criminal cases where he made good use of his quick wit, his knowledge of human nature, and his forensic gifts. It was then, and not till then, that his star arose and took position among the bright galaxy of the day.

His genius first displayed itself in the contest between the clergy and the people of Virginia in an effort of popular eloquence. (The Parsons case). His second brilliant display was before a committee of the house of burgesses in an election case -- and here the successive bursts of eloquence in defense of the right of suffrage, from a man so very plain and humble in his appearance, struck the committee with astonishment.

So having bought 10,000 acres of land lying in the eastern and northeastern part of the county, he built his house on a ridge a few miles east of Henry Court House and began the practice of law.

In 1765 he was elected a member of the house of burgesses, and prepared and was instrumental in passing through that body a series of resolutions against the stamp act, and the scheme of taxing America by the British parliament. It was in the midst of the debate which arose on these resolutions that Mr. Henry exclaimed: "Caesar had his Brutus, Charles the First his Cromwell, and George the Third --"

"Treason" cried the speaker. "Treason! Treason!" echoed from every part of the house. Henry faltered not for an instant; but taking the loftier attitude, and fixing on the speaker an eye of fire, he finished his sentence with the firmest emphasis -- "may profit by their example. If this be treason, make the most of it."

George the Third was the last king of England to rule over the colonies.

From this period, Mr. Henry became the idol of the people of Virginia and his influence was felt throughout the continent as one of the great champions of civil liberty.

He continued a member of the house of burgesses till the commencement of the revolution -- was one of the standing committee of correspondence, and a member of the Virginia delegation in the first general Congress in Philadelphia in 1774 and 1775. At the Virginia revolutionary convention on March 23, 1775, in St. John's church, Richmond, he delivered the speech which assured his position as one of the world's great orators and advocates of human liberty. Convinced that war was inevitable, he presented strong resolutions for arming the Virginia militia, and defended them in a fiery speech with the dramatic peroration, "I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death." As he made this closing remark, he held aloft an ivory letter opener, letting it sink slowly into his breast at the word "death". As he sat down, the audience remained for a brief time as if stunned.^{4, p.35} He acted a short time in a military capacity.

Resigning his military command, he was chosen first governor of the commonwealth of Virginia in 1776 and successively reelected to that office in 1777 and 1778 for one-year terms, thus serving continuously as long as the new constitution permitted. He was recalled to public service as leading member of the state legislature from 1780 to 1784 and again from 1787 to 1790. From 1784 to 1786 he served as governor. He declined to attend the Philadelphia constitutional convention of 1787 and in 1788 was the leading opponent of ratification at the Virginia convention. This action, which aroused much controversy, resulted from his suspicion that the north would abandon to Spain the right of navigation of the Mississippi and, above all, from his fear for state and individual rights. He was reconciled, however, to the new federal government, especially after the passage of the Bill of Rights, for which he had been largely responsible. He became a firm friend of the constitution, and of the federal system of government established by that instrument.

His family responsibilities and ill health forced him to decline a series of high government offices. In 1799, however, he consented to run again for the legislature, where he wished to oppose the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions that asserted a form of states' rights doctrine. During his successful electoral campaign he made his last speech, a moving plea for American unity. He did not take his seat, for he died on June 6th, 1799, at his last plantation home near Brookneal, Virginia.

Patrick Henry was a natural orator of the highest order, combining imagination, cuteness, dexterity, and ingenuity, with the most forcible action and extraordinary powers of utterance. As a statesman, he was bold and sagacious, and his name is brilliantly and lastingly connected with those great events which resulted in the emancipation of his country.

It was also reported by his sister, Elizabeth: "The cradle began to rock in his household when Patrick was 18, and it was still rocking when he died at 63" since in his life of 63 years he fathered 17 children, the last child being born about 1795. He never had a home without a baby!^{22; 23, p.341; 12, p.159}

His first term of governor was rather happy. "He enjoyed mingling in this genteel provincial society. The family acquired a handsome coach, but the governor put on few airs himself. He often made his own fire, and sometimes he could be seen riding out to his farm on horseback with one of his toddlers propped on the saddle in front of him and another hanging on behind. Henry dressed in his habitual black suit, brightened only by a cloak lined with scarlet, and he wore a dressed wig in a prewar style that the town's young dandies found a trifle passe."^{23, p.365}

Fort Henry and Henry County were named in his honor.²⁰

At his last day he was gravely ill, sitting in his favorite three-corner chair, when Dr. Cabell told him his condition and gave him a dose of liquid mercury. Patrick pulled his silken cap over his eyes and prayed a short prayer for his family, country, and soul and calmly swallowed the liquid mercury. There was time to say a few loving words to his family, weeping around the chair; to tell them how thankful he was that God, who blessed him all his life, would permit him to die without any pain. He died quietly. The appropriate inscription on his slab covering his grave at Red Hill: "His Fame his Best Epitaph."⁵, p. 452

When her mother, Sarah became ill, Martha came back home and nursed her mother until her death in 1775, the year of father Patrick's "Give me Liberty or Give me Death" speech. Patrick was away from home at this time and Martha became mother to her brothers and sisters.

The Fontaines moved to Henry County when father Patrick finished his initial term as governor, and lived on a farm which they had purchased from him. John Fontaine died of malaria in 1793. After his death, Martha and her six children lived in her father's home when he lived in Prince Edward County and at Long Island, and he was appointed their guardian.

Martha's oldest son, Patrick Henry Fontaine, became a well-known minister. Her daughter, Martha, married Nathaniel West Dandridge, the second, the nephew of Dorothea Dandridge, Patrick's second wife. Son William married Martha Hale Dandridge, the daughter of Nathaniel West Dandridge, Jr., the brother of Patrick's second wife, Dorothea. Several of the grandchildren and great-grandchildren of Martha, Betsy, and Dorothea intermarried. Martha eventually moved back to Henry County and is buried on what is known as "the Old Tuggle Place" a few miles east of Martinsville.³

John was a captain in the army and fought at Saratoga in 1777. The Revolutionary War in progress, Washington losing to Gen. Howe and wintering at Valley Forge, the Continentals defeating Gen. Burgoyne at Saratoga caused anguish for John, now 20 years of age, and an artillery captain. He had distinguished himself in the fighting and then walked among the American dead, lingering over the bodies of men he had known. "Then he drew his own sword, broke it to pieces and grieved inconsolably. After a melancholy winter, John resigned his commission; the governor (father Patrick) had to dispatch money and a servant to New Jersey to fetch the poor boy home."^{5, p.327} Patrick also learned at that time that John was in love with Dorothea Dandridge, but Patrick had just taken her as his second wife, being 21 years her senior.^{4, p.168}

He resigned his commission in 1778. The story is recited of his love of Dorothea, as was John Paul Jones in love with her, but marriages being arranged at that time, her father chose the governor of Virginia instead of his son, or an unknown sailor.³

- 1) Edmund HENRY, b. 1791, probably Henry County, VA.

Edmund married and had 14 children,¹ but researcher does not have name of spouse. He was probably born in Henry County, Virginia, since his father, John, died in Henry County later that same year. Also, his presence and age would be consistent with the will of Patrick Henry, who left a bequest to Edmund, and no mention of John, and said if Edmund reached the age of majority or married, implying that in 1799 he was a minor. John was already deceased by then, and so there was no mention of him in the will.

The bequest read as follows: I give to my grand son Edmund Henry when he arrives to the age of twenty one years and not before in fee simple the thousand acres of land where his father died joining Perego's line, Coles line, and the line of the land intended for my son Edward decd--together with the negros and other property on the said one thousand acres of land--But in case the said Edmund shall died under the age of twenty one years and without issue then alive, I will the said land sales and other property to my six sons above mentioned equally in fee simple."

William had no issue. Elizabeth was a widow. He served as sheriff in Craven County, NC, from 1794 until his death. His will leaves "all my lands in Henry County, VA, to my wife Elizabeth and 1000 acres in Norfolk County, VA, known by the name of Green Sea, given me by my father and 600 acres near Kemps Landing in VA to my brother, Edward."³

m. Sep 9, 1786, at Salisbury, VA, Spencer ROANE, Judge, b. about 1762 in Essex County, VA, d. Sep 4, 1822 at Warm Springs, VA, the son of William ROANE and Elizabeth BALL.

The father, William Roane was a burgess with Patrick Henry and was raptured with him.

Roane himself was a volunteer in the Revolution at the age of 13, armed with a short carbine, tomahawk, and a hunting shirt with the words "Liberty or death" over his heart. He was not a handsome fellow; a picture at 35 or 40 shows dark side and chin whiskers; 'something dubious about the eyes, and the face is not pleasing.' "⁴

Judge Spencer Roane, was a Richmond politician and lawyer; he was a judge of the Court of Appeals and a Republican. He was a friend of Jefferson and of Madison and of Monroe.²⁸ After some negotiation between father Patrick Henry and Spencer, Henry assured him he would endow her as her sisters to 1,000 pounds and an equal share of the estate to daughters of both marriages upon his death. Anne had little to say about the affair and went to the alter unwillingly."⁵ He brought suit after Patrick's death against widow Dorothea charging that Patrick had made certain promises to him of the dowry or funds to come to the children and alleging the need to marry off the children of the first marriage to Sally Winston because of the injustice of Dorothea.^{4, p.307}

Anne died at the home of home of her sister, Elizabeth Aylett, after a short illness.

5. Elizabeth "Betsey" HENRY, b. Apr 1769, d. 1842 at Mountville, VA, buried at Aylett Graveyard, Prince William, VA.

m. Oct 12, 1786, at King William County, VA, Philip AYLETT, son of Col. William AYLETT. Philip was speaker of the House of Delegates.

Elizabeth's grandmother's will dated in 1784, reports her as a single woman. The will gave her "negro man Reuben" but Reuben will decide whether to be sold to General Russell, her uncle, where he was at that time, or to go with her. If he stayed, Elizabeth was to be paid for him.

Her husband, Philip was gay and dashing; he drank and played cards. Betsey was demure, devout young land, brought up to read her prayerbook and Bible every day and to attend the Episcopal church. She considered him "too wild" for her to marry. Philip's father had died and his step-father, anxious to get him out of the country, was about to send him to Oxford. Before leaving, he made one last appeal to Betsey and although she was ill, she came downstairs and again rejected him, fainting from exhaustion...he pressed his suit and in a "semi-conscious state", she agreed. He did continue to party and was not curbed immediately, but settled down and built his mansion "Montville" in King William County, some miles back from the river to escape malaria.⁴

Betsey was a beautiful, deeply religious girl. With Philip, it was love at first sight, and step-mother, Dorothea, approved wholeheartedly. But, Betsey was not cooperative. She thought Philip too wild and foolhardy. When he came to ask for her hand, Betsey pleaded illness, but Dorothea insisted on her coming out to meet him. She refused his offer of marriage and then fainted from exhaustion. Poor Philip left, brokenhearted. Dorothea, not to be outdone, talked Betsey into saying "yes", and then called Philip back, saying that Betsey had been overcome by emotion when she fainted. The marriage turned out to be a happy one.³

6. Edward HENRY, b. 1771, d. Oct 29, 1794, at New Glasgow, VA.

Edward never married. He was an attorney, and was called "Neddy". Neddy showed the most promise of any of Patrick Henry's sons by being an outstanding lawyer. He fell in love with his first cousin, Sarah (Sally) Campbell, daughter of Gen. William Campbell and Elizabeth Henry Campbell. His father did not approve, because he felt that if Neddy married into this wealthy family he jeopardized his chances of becoming a self-made man. Neddy hoped to impress Sally by qualifying to become a lawyer, but he was not quick enough. He qualified in February, 1793, but Sally had already married Gen. Francis Preston in January of that year.

Shortly after, Patrick Henry gave Neddy 949 acres of land on Smith's River and Leatherwood Creek in Henry County near the land of his sister, Martha Fontaine, who was a widow by this time. Neddy died in 1794 and is believed to be buried at Red Hill. Patrick wrote to the court in Henry County stating, "I consider the right of administering the Estate of my son Edward Henry dec'd as belonging to me. But do waive the right and do hereby desire and request that administering the estate of my said son - Edward be granted to my daughter Martha Fontaine..." In memory of Neddy's passing in 1794, Patrick and Dorothea renamed Winston, their son born in the same year, Edward Winston Henry.³

m. 2nd, Oct 9, 1777, Dorothea DANDRIDGE, b. Sep 25, 1757, d. Feb 16, 1831, Halifax, VA, buried at Red Hill, VA, the daughter of Nathaniel West DANDRIDGE and Dorothea SPOTSWOOD. (See William Dandridge, Chapter 10). After the death of Patrick Henry, she married Judge Edmund Winston. (See Chapter 11).

Dorothea dark-eyed, dark-haired and she bore 11 children to Patrick, and with his six from the first marriage, they had 17 children, 15 living. Her father gave a dowry of 12 slaves and some Hanover land. After Patrick died, she married his cousin, Judge Edmund Winston, through his grandfather, Isaac Winston.

Dorothea was the daughter of Nathaniel West Dandridge, whose brother, John Dandridge, was the father of Martha Washington, making Dorothea a first cousin of Martha. Patrick and Dorothea visited the Washingtons at Mt. Vernon. She died at the home of a daughter, Sarah Scott, at the age of 74.⁶

Issue:

1. Dorothea Spotswood HENRY, b. Aug 2, 1778, Red Hill, VA, d. Jun 17, 1854, Memphis, TN.
 - m. Jun 3, 1795, at Red Hill, VA, George D. WINSTON, b. c. 1774, d. Jul 15, 1831, at Rockingham County, NC, the son of Edmund WINSTON (Judge) and Alice WINSTON. (See Judge Edmund Winston, Chapter 11).

Dorothea Spotswood, called Dolly, was married as shown by Charlotte County Marriage Records. She was "named for her mother, was married in the living room at Red Hill to her second cousin, George Winston, son of Judge Edmund Winston. Judge Winston latter married his daughter-in-law's mother...Patrick Henry had asked Judge Winston to take care of his widow, and perhaps Winston felt marriage was the best way! Dorothea (this subject) had nine children and after the death of her husband, lived with them in Memphis, TN, where she died in 1854".³

Sarah "Sally" was married first to Robert Campbell and lived at Seven Islands in Halifax County, which was given to her husband as a dowry. He died after five years of marriage and had no issue.^{1, 3, 7}

Alexander Scott was apparently married previously in 1786 to Frances Whiting, who died Feb 16, 1807. He had six issue from that marriage. He was a private in the Continental Army and his heirs received 200 acres of land in 1834 for his service.^{8, p.630}

Sarah, called "Sally", married at Red Hill and lived at Seven Islands in Halifax County near Red Hill, which was given to her husband as a dowry. He died after 5 years of marriage and had no issue.^{3, 1, 7} She then married Alexander Scott, a private in the Continental line, Revolutionary War, from VA⁸. His heirs received 200 acres of land in 1834 for his service. In 1811, "Sally" was at a theater in Richmond which caught fire. She was rescued by Alexander Scott, a widower from Fauquier County. A romance ensued and they were married in 1813. There were three children from this marriage. "Sally" died in 1856 and is buried at Seven Islands.³

Called "Kitty" she married a distant cousin from the eastern shores of VA⁴ at Charlotte County, VA (Charlotte County Records).⁹ An only daughter died before maturity. Spelling of "Catharine" is from Patrick Henry will.¹⁰ Spouse Edward Henry was son of Judge James Henry. She fell in love with Edward after he rescued her when she fell overboard from a boat in the Chesapeake Bay. She died in 1891 at age of 20. Her only daughter, Dorothea, died in 1813.³

Edward Hugh then married Elizabeth Washington PEYTON and had three issue, the names not known here.

Patrick was listed in the obituaries in the Virginia Gazette on October 24, 1804.^{11, 12} He went to Prince Edward College.⁹ He inherited half of his father's Long Island estate, but it is doubtful that he ever lived there. It was inherited by his daughter and stayed in the family until 1904.³

Fayette married Miss Elcan. Mormon records show Miss Alcan, b. 1785. Also shows his birth as Oct 29, but the family Bible⁴ indicates Oct 9. They had no issue¹ but see next paragraph. Fayette inherited half of the Long Island property, but it is not known if he lived there. However, the will and settlement of his estate lists him as being in Campbell County where Long Island is located. They had one child who died at birth in March of 1808. Anne died at Red Hill in May of 1808 and Fayette died in 1812. There are no stones to mark the graves, but it is assumed that all three are buried at Red Hill. Fayette's will indicated that he had become quite prosperous in his 28 years. It provided for all his property to be sold at public auction. Half the proceeds was to be given to his mother, Dorothea, and the other half was to be divided between his sisters, Sally Campbell and Dorothea Winston. Dr. George Cabell, Patrick Henry's physician, and father-in-law of Alexander Spotswood Henry, purchased the Long Island property.³

Alexander inherited half of his father's Saura Town lands in North Carolina. He married Pauline Cabell, daughter of Patrick Henry's personal physician and lived in Shady Grove, Campbell County, VA, for an undetermined time. It is believed the property was Pauline's dowry. She died when the youngest was but a year old, and Alexander never remarried. He died at the home of his son, Dr. Patrick Henry in Charlotte County, VA, and is buried at Red Hill.

He was never noted for working. Around Shady Grove when a man had no visible occupation, he was described as "clerking for Captain Henry".³

After Patrick Henry's death, Edmund Winston married Patrick's wife, Dorothea, and took on the problems of raising the Henry kids. They "included the younger Henry boys, spirited lads who had their troubles at college after Henry's death. There was... Nathaniel Henry, who was suspended at New London Academy and Hampden-Sydney and even denied admission to Drury Lacy School... He got into hot water at Washington College (now Washington & Lee) by calling the soup 'slop', threatening the steward, and alleging that there were 'flees' (sic) in the bread...one or two of the other Henry lads also, while they would become good citizens, were not distinguished for their collegiate achievements." ⁴, p.439

He inherited the other half of his father's Saura Town property and apparently settled down sufficiently to successfully run a school for boys in Leaksville, NC. He and his wife had six children. His obituary stated that he had inherited much of "the sprightliness and vivacity" of his father. ³

Edward inherited half of the almost 3000 acres of Red Hill Plantation. He named his half "Winston", perhaps as a way of showing his resentment at having been renamed from Winston to Edward Winston in memory of his half-brother who died that same year of his birth. Edward married and lived at Winston all his life. They had nine children. The property stayed in the family until the death of Edward's grandson, Dandridge Yuille Henry, around 1950. John was a planter and a magistrate. Like his brother, Edward, John was named for a deceased half-brother (John, born of Sarah Shelton, and died in 1791). Elvira Henry McClelland was a niece of Patrick Henry, Jr., in 1826 and it was probably around this time that he came to live at the half of Red Hill that he had inherited. He built a two-story addition to the Patrick Henry house, and Elvira made many improvements to the surrounding landscape. They are buried at Red Hill, as is one of their six children, Laura Carter.

Their son, William Wirt Henry, apparently bought out his siblings' interest in Red Hill after the death of their parents. His daughter, Lucy Gray Henry Harrison, in turn bought out her two brothers' and one sister's portion of their Red Hill inheritance. Mrs. Harrison enlarged the Red Hill house into an 18-room mansion around 1912. In 1919 the house burned to the ground. Mrs. Harrison, a widow with no children, lived out the last quarter century of her life in the Red Hill law office, which at the time had a two-story addition attached to it. In 1944 the Patrick Henry Foundation was formed and purchased the remaining 920 acres of John Henry's Red Hill.³

WILLIAM CHRISTIAN, CHAPTER 8

Israel CHRISTIAN, b. abt 1710.

Issue:

1. William CHRISTIAN, Col, b. 1743 at Augusta, GA, d.
Apr 8, 1786, in Ohio.

m. Ann HENRY, daughter of John HENRY and Sarah
WINSTON (See Chapter 3) b. about 1746, d. May 4, 1790, and buried at sea.

William was a colonel and an Indian fighter. He was killed in an Indian fight in Ohio^{19, p.63} in a skirmish with the Wabash Indians in northwestern Kentucky^{1, p.367} on April 8, 1786.

In August, 1785, he moved his family to Kentucky, but was not pleased with the surroundings and determined to leave. The family was in constant danger from Indian incursions and he invariably headed the parties that went in pursuit of the marauders. In April, 1786, some Indians from the Wabash were thus pursued by 20 men with Col. Christian as their leader were followed across the Ohio. They were overtaken by the Colonel and three of his men on the 8th. Without waiting for their companions to come up, they rushed the savages, and in the conflict both Col. Christian and Capt. Isaac Keller received mortal wounds. Gov. Patrick Henry wrote his sister, Anne, a touching letter, not copied here, but can be found in reference^{1, v.2, p.286}.

He was a lawyer and appointed Captain by age 20. The town of Christianburg was named in his honor.^{20, p.288} He was a Colonel by age 32, and was killed at age 43.^{20, p.289}

Anne Henry Christian was on a sea voyage returning from Antigua, West Indies, where she had gone for her health, and died of consumption while at sea and was, therefore, buried at sea.^{19, p.63}

WILLIAM DANDRIDGE, CHAPTER 12

William DANDRIDGE, Capt., d. 1743, was married Oct, 1719, at Elsing Green, King William County, VA, to Unity WEST, daughter of Capt. Nathaniel WEST and Mrs. Martha W. MACON (See Chapter 14).

Issue:

1. Nathaniel West DANDRIDGE, b. Dec 7, 1729,^{16, p.325} at Elsing Green, VA, d. Jan 16, 1786, at Hanover, VA.
m. (1st) Jun 18, 1747, Dorothea SPOTSWOOD, daughter of Gov. Alexander SPOTSWOOD, and Anne BRAYNE.
She d. before 1770. (See Chapter 15).

Nathaniel was a Colonel in Virginia. His last will and testament¹⁸ gave a Negro slave named Mary to daughter Dorothea. It indicates his children, spouses and marriage dates.¹⁷ His will gave property and slaves to wife and children, and then a codicil made Oct 8, 1782, added an important bequest, leaving his still to his (second) wife, Jane Pollard, for her life time and then "at my death to my son, William". Will in 1782 also gave wife the use of the land, chariot and horses, 1/4th of the household and kitchen furniture and livestock.¹⁸

Nathaniel had a brother named John. John married and had a daughter, Martha Dandridge, who was married to Daniel Parke Custis. Martha and Daniel had four children, two of which are John Parke Custis, b. 1753, and Martha Parke Custis, b. 1755. At CUSTIS' death in Revolution, Martha married on Jan 6, 1759, soon-to-be Gen. George Washington, b. Feb 22, 1732, d. Dec 14, 1799, but they had no issue. He was said to be very fond of the two named and adopted them.

m. Philip AYLETT

At the Aylett estate at Montville are relics of the era. In 1809 Philip was provided by his father with a negro, two horses, $500 and a gold watch which had been presented to his mother by Patrick Henry. Philip started for Tennessee to practice law. Being a high-spirited young man, he soon got rid of his money, the negro, and his horses, and became involved in a quarrel with Col. Sam Houston, which resulted in a duel. They fired twice at thirty paces, but neither was seriously injured. They afterward became such good friends that Houston made him a present of the pistols.^{24, p.75; 11, p.57} They had issue.

WILLIAM CAMPBELL, CHAPTER 13

William CAMPBELL, Gen., born of Fincastle, VA.

m. Elizabeth HENRY, b. about 1749, the daughter of Col. John HENRY and Sarah WINSTON. (See Alexander Henry, Chapter 3).

Gen. William Campbell was a general in the Revolutionary War. He was commander at King's Mountain. A wild-looking Scotsman with a shock of flaming red hair,^{1, p.343} 6'2" with a splendid physique. Elizabeth married and went to his home at "Aspenvale" at Seven Mile Ford in Southwest Virginia, and there they settled in a rude house, at first a two-room log cabin with a dog trot in between overlooking the Holston River (South Fork).^{4, p.87}

Elizabeth Henry's first marriage. She quarreled with her brother, Patrick, on a number of issues of the day, and especially his unwillingness to act upon the abhorrence of slavery they both felt. In her later years after her second marriage, and after achieving renown as a Methodist evangelist, she manumitted the slaves she had inherited from her father and husbands.^{1, p.326}

The Mormon church files show her birth in 1743, but if family placement is correct, that is probably too early. Her grandfather, Isaac Winston's, will of 1760 recites the devisees and says to give "when they come of age or marry," so she must have been born between 1740 and 1760, probably about 1749.

Her second marriage was to Gen. William Russell in 1783, and in her later years was referred to as Madam Russell. Grandmother Sarah Winston Henry's will¹⁸ bequeaths "lend (Elizabeth) five negros (named) and at her death, to be divided equally" between every surviving child of Elizabeth Russell, but one to go to grandson Charles Henry Campbell. If she has no children by Russell, then other disposition was to be made.

2. Charles Henry CAMPBELL

Charles was given a Negro, James Allen, at death of his aunt Elizabeth Russell. The will also gives he and sister 8,000 pounds of tobacco to be put at interest until they reach lawful age or marry. This will was made in 1784, so they had to be minors, and parents married in 1776, so they couldn't have been born prior to 1777.^{18, p. 757}

JOHN WEST, CHAPTER 14

John WEST, Capt., was probably the first white settler in Pamunkey Neck. In 1633 he was granted an additional 2,000 acres of land because his son, John, was the first Christian born in that region. He was one of three brothers who came to the region after 1610. West Point was named after the West family, the first being Thomas West, the 3rd Lord de la Warre, who came to Jamestown as Governor in 1610, his arrival saving the starving colonists, who were on the point of abandoning the colony when his ships came into the bay.^{24, p.66}

She died at the home of her nephew, Dr. Philip P. Southall.

Joseph Henry was educated in Georgetown, D.C. a graduate of the University of Virginia School of Law, an eminent jurist, and a man of the highest integrity. In 1833 Mr. Stras went to Tazewell to live, where he soon rose to the top rank in his profession, insomuch that even to this day his reputation as a great lawyer is still remembered there. He was noted for his extraordinary memory and discriminating judgment, above all for his elevated character. The two last decades of his life were spent in total blindness, yet in spite of this infirmity he pursued his tasks with his accustomed industry and vigor. He was an expert Whist player, and even when he had lost his sight, he was still a champion at this game. In 1850 Mr. Stras married Elinor Letetia Higginbottom of Burks Garden, by whom he had three children.^{15, v.5, p.881}
